

From the Beginning

In 1989, after having served in a sales management position with a major corporation, I made a career move. I accepted a position as an area representative for an irrigation distributor. At that time irrigation in my region was in its infancy.

I soon found that in order for potential users to recognize the need for irrigation, education was of utmost importance. The Irrigation Association, located in Falls Church, Virginia, USA, an international organization for landscape and agricultural irrigation, has grown to be the most notable source for continuing education in the irrigation industry and awareness in an ever-changing world.

Today as an EPA WaterSense<sup>SM</sup> partner, my goal is to continue educating consumers by helping them use water resources more efficiently, and to preserve them for future generations. By reducing unnecessary water consumption, we can reduce water and wastewater infrastructure costs. As an independent designer, I am pleased to provide the end user with the very best irrigation design suited to his/her needs.
